Sustainable Development Law

The Centre for International Sustainable Development Law (CISDL) is based at the McGill University Faculty of Law and works in cooperation with the Université de Montreal Faculty of Law, and the Université de Québec à Montreal. The ISDL International Jurists Mandate and research agendas were officially launched at Sustainable Justice 2002: Implementing International Sustainable Development Law conference in Montreal, Canada. CISDL has guidance from three Montreal-based treaty secretariats (the NAFTA Commission for Environmental Cooperation, the UN Convention on Biological Diversity, and the Montreal Protocol Multilateral Fund), an international council of sustainable development legal and policy experts, and a roster of distinguished international advisors. Its mission is to promote sustainable societies and the protection of ecosystems by advancing the understanding, development and implementation of international sustainable development law.

Selected CISDL Members PUBLICATIONS LIST April, 2003

CISDL members come from developed and developing countries and are well-qualified in academic and legal research related to sustainable development law. Many hold scholarly, research, lecturer or professorial appointments in their fields of economic, environmental and social development law, and have published in these areas. This list, in alphabetical order, details the publications of several CISDL members in the field of sustainable development law. Their publications were peer-reviewed unless indicated with an asterisk (*).

CISDL members have collaborated pro bono on several publications over the first two years of CISDL operations. These are also disaggregated and listed at the end of this document.
